QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Petitioner sued for refund of federal estate taxes and interest based on property in the decedent's possession at death which had been derived from his fiduciary malfeasance about eight months prior thereto. Upon Respondent's motion for summary judgment, the district court determined as a matter of law that the decedent's command, dominion and control over the misappropriated property warranted inclusion in the decedent's gross estate for federal estate tax purposes, and determined that there was no genuine dispute as to any material fact. The district court ruled in favor of Respondent on the motion and rendered its Memorandum Opinion. The Fourth Circuit affirmed per curiam for the reasons stated in such opinion.

These questions are presented:

1. Does a decedent's command, dominion and control over property derived from his fiduciary malfeasance warrant, as a matter of law, inclusion of such property in his estate under the applicable federal estate tax statutes?
2. Does a district court summary judgment ruling which precludes a decedent's estate from presenting evidence bearing on the decedent's interest in property and the value of any such interest so depart from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings as to warrant this Court's supervisory powers when a determination of the decedent's interest therein and value thereof are required by the applicable federal estate tax statutes?

3. Is a federal estate tax on property derived by a decedent from his fiduciary malfeasance, based solely on the decedent's command, dominion and control over such property, a direct tax in violation of the Constitution of the United States of America, Article I, Section 9?

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is unpublished, and is set forth as Appendix A. The opinion of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia at Harrisonburg is found at 5:06-cv-00041-sgw-jgw, and is set forth as Appendix B. The Court of Appeals denied a timely petition for rehearing on December 29, 2008. (App. C).

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

This Court's jurisdiction is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTION, STATUTORY AND REGULATORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Constitution of the United States of America.

Article I, Section 9, Limitations upon Powers of Congress —

No capitation, or other direct, tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

Sixteenth Amendment, Authorizing Income Taxes —

Authorizing Income Taxes. — The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Title 26 United States Code.

Section 2001(a) Imposition —

A tax is hereby imposed on the transfer of the taxable estate of every decedent who is a citizen or resident of the United States.

Section 2031(a) General —

The value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including to the extent provided for in this part, the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated.

Section 2033 — Property In Which The Decedent Had An Interest —

The value of the gross estate shall include the value of all property to the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death.

26 Code of Federal Regulations.

Section 20.2033-1(a) — In General

Various statutory provisions which exempt bonds, notes, bills, and certificates of indebtedness of the Federal Government or its agencies and the interest thereon from taxation are generally not applicable to the estate tax, since such tax is an excise tax on the transfer of property at death and is not a tax on the property transferred.

Section 20.2031-1(b) — Valuation Of Property In General

All relevant facts and elements of value as of the applicable valuation date shall be considered in every case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner timely filed administrative claims for refund of federal estate taxes and interest in January 2003 and August 2004. The administrative claims maintained that Petitioner had erroneously overstated and overvalued the decedent's gross estate as reported on its federal estate tax return by including and overvaluing assets which Wendell Hester, Trustee, had within eight months prior to his death improperly transferred from himself as trustee to himself personally out of a trust established by his deceased wife, and by including and overvaluing assets that were the outgrowth thereof in his personal account at his death. The Internal Revenue Service denied the administrative claims for refund.

On May 23, 2006, the Petitioner timely filed a tax refund suit against the Respondent in the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, Harrisonburg Division, seeking to recover the federal estate taxes and interest pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7422. The district court had subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1). Respondent moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Fed. R. Civ. P. The district court considered matters outside the pleadings and therefore treated the motion to dismiss as a motion by Respondent for summary judgment. Finding that there was no genuine dispute as to any material fact and that Respondent was entitled to judgment as a matter of law, the district court issued its Memorandum Opinion and entered its Final Order on March 2, 2007, ordering and adjudging that summary judgment be entered in favor of Respondent. By Order of May 7, 2007, the district court declined to amend its Final Order of March 2, 2007.

Petitioner filed its Notice of Appeal on May 1, 2007 and its Amended Notice of Appeal on May 14, 2007. The Fourth Circuit rendered its unpublished per curiam opinion on October 21, 2008 in which it affirmed for the reasons stated by the district court in its Memorandum Opinion. Petitioner timely filed its Petition for Panel Rehearing and Petition for Rehearing En Banc on November 25, 2008. On December 29, 2008 the Fourth Circuit denied the Petition for Panel Rehearing and Petition for Rehearing En Banc. On January 6, 2009 the Fourth Circuit issued its mandate declaring that its judgment entered October 21, 2008 takes effect January 6, 2009.

Wendell Hester had died as a citizen of the United States of America and a resident of the State of Virginia.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The Fourth Circuit has decided important questions of federal estate taxation in a manner that conflicts with relevant decisions of this Court and with the Constitution of the United States of America. The applicable federal estate tax statutes include elements which are inherently factual and because of that, the taxpayer should not be precluded from submitting evidence. By its ruling on Respondent's summary judgment motion, the district court did so and the Fourth Circuit sanctioned that action. This should not be an accepted and usual course for judicial proceedings involving application of such statutes. The arguments for allowance of the writ on the basis of each are set forth in I, II and III below.

I. REVIEW IS NECESSARY TO RESOLVE A DISPUTE CONCERNING APPLICATION OF THE FEDERAL ESTATE TAX TO PROPERTY ON THE BASIS OF A DECEDENT'S COMMAND, DOMINION, AND CONTROL OVER THE PROPERTY.

A. The Fourth Circuit affirmed the district court for reasons stated by the district court in its Memorandum Opinion. The district court's reason for including the misappropriated assets in the decedent's estate was his command, dominion and control over such assets. The district court, and in turn the Fourth Circuit, cited the applicable federal statutes. The applicable federal statutes, i.e., 26 U.S.C. §§ 2001(a), 2031(a) and 2033, provide for a federal estate tax on a decedent's transfer of property, with the amount of tax measured by the value of a decedent's interest in such property. By ruling in favor of Respondent on its summary judgment motion, the district court found as a matter of law that the decedent's command, dominion and control met all requirements of the applicable federal statutes for inclusion of such property in his estate.

These statutes first require a determination of whether a decedent has an interest in property. State law creates the legal interests and rights, but federal law determines which of such interests or rights are to be taxed. Morgan v. Commissioner, 309 U.S. 78 (1940). By ruling as it did on the Respondent's motion for summary judgment, the district court implicitly determined that the decedent's command, dominion and control were sufficient under Virginia law to rise to the level of a one hundred percent unencumbered interest or right in the misappropriated assets. There is ample case law in Virginia on breach of fiduciary duties, constructive fraud, unjust enrichment, equitable liens and constructive trusts to support a conclusion that the decedent owned at death less than a one hundred percent unencumbered interest in the misappropriated assets. Buchanan v. Buchanan, 266 Va. 207, 214 (2003); Faulknier v. Shafer, 264 Va. 210, 215 (2002); Crestar Bank v. Williams, 250 Va. 198, 204 (1995); Greenspan v. Osheroff, 232 Va. 388, 400 (1986); and Leonard v. Counts, 221 Va. 582, 588-589 (1980). Notwithstanding that which is contemplated by Morgan v. Commissioner, supra, the district court failed to consider these cases or any other Virginia law in reaching its conclusion that the decedent owned a one hundred percent unencumbered interest in the misappropriated assets. That warrants review by this Court.

B. The federal estate tax is on the transfer, not on the property. Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41 (1900); United States v. Wells Fargo Bank, 485 U.S. 351 (1988); 26 C.F. R. 20.2033-1(a). The same Virginia cases and others deal with the interest, if any, one may transfer in property obtained by breach of fiduciary duties, constructive fraud, and similar acts of malfeasance. The district court did not deal with the transfer issue. In failing to do so, the district court missed a crucial element of the applicable statutes and of the guidance of Morgan v. Commissioner, supra. That failure warrants review by this Court.

II. REVIEW IS NECESSARY TO AVOID INEQUITIES TO ESTATES PRECLUDED FROM PRESENTING EVIDENCE REQUIRED BY THE APPLICABLE FEDERAL ESTATE TAX STATUTES.

Once it has been established that a decedent has a transferable interest in property, the applicable statutes require that the value of such interest be established. 26 U.S.C. § 2033. All relevant facts and elements of value must be considered in every case. 26 C.F.R. 20.2031-1(b). Value is an issue of fact. Estate of Godley v. C.I.R., 286 F.3d 210, 214 (4th Cir. 2002); Burbage v. C.I.R., 774 F.2d 644, 646 (4th Cir. 1985). By ruling as it did on Respondent's summary motion, the district court precluded Petitioner from submitting evidence on the value of any interest which the decedent may have had in the misappropriated property at his death. The end result for this decedent is an estate tax on misappropriated property possessed by him, measured without consideration of all relevant facts bearing on the value of any interest therein which the decedent may have owned at his death.

Additionally, the interest of a decedent in property involves issues of fact that bear on the legal quantity, legal quality and legal transferability of such interest. Here the district court's ruling on summary judgment motion precluded Petitioner from submitting such evidence.

Since the interest of a decedent in property, the value thereof, and the transferability thereof are required elements of the applicable federal estate tax statutes, it is inequitable and should be improper for a district court to preclude an estate from presenting its evidence on such issues, and for a circuit court to sanction such preclusion. The fact that the Fourth Circuit did so warrants review by this Court.

III. REVIEW IS NECESSARY TO ESTABLISH WHETHER CONSTITUTIONAL STATUTES OF TAXATION HAVE BEEN APPLIED IN AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL MANNER.

While the district court, and in turn the Fourth Circuit, cited the applicable federal statutes, neither delved into the foundation for inclusion, or in turn the foundation for taxation. The foundation for inclusion and taxation must be grounded in the Constitution of the United States of America.

Authority for the federal estate tax does not derive from the Constitution of the United States, as does the income tax, and thus the applicable statutes must satisfy the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States of America, Article I, Section 9, that Congress shall not have the power to levy a capitation or other direct tax unless in proportion to the census or enumeration therein directed to be taken. The applicable federal estate tax statutes avoid the constitutional prohibition of a direct tax by operating as an excise tax on the privilege of death time transfers, measured by the value thereof. Knowlton v. Moore, supra, United States v. Wells Fargo Bank, supra. Respondent's Regulation is consistent. 26 C.F.R. 20.2033-1(a).

Nevertheless the lower courts treated the assets misappropriated by Wendell Hester as includible and taxable for his federal estate tax purposes solely on grounds of his command, dominion and control over such assets. The cases upon which the lower courts relied for inclusion and taxation are income tax cases. The lower courts failed to recognize that the income tax statutes derive from the Constitution of the United States of America, 16th Amendment. That constitutional authorization is broad, all encompassing, and justifies the actual command, dominion and control theory for inclusion and taxation in income tax cases. But it has no application in estate tax cases.

The practical effect of the lower courts' approach is a direct tax on the misappropriated assets in contravention to the Constitution of the United States of America, Article I, Section 9. Since the Congress cannot do this, federal administrative agencies and federal courts should not be allowed to do so. An end result that effectively overrides the constitutional prohibition warrants review by this Court.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, petitioner respectfully requests that the Supreme Court grant review of this matter.

Judges.

PER CURIAM:

The estate of Wendell Hester appeals the district court's order granting summary judgment in favor of the United States on a tax refund suit, 26 U.S.C. § 7422 (2000). At issue is whether the assets that were improperly transferred to the decedent's investment account were includible in his gross estate. We have reviewed the record included on appeal as well as the parties' briefs, and have found no reversible error. Accordingly, we affirm for the reasons stated by the district court. Estate of Wendell Hester v. United States, No. 5:06-cv-00041-sgw-jgw, 2007 WL 703170 (W.D.Va. March 2, 2007). We dispense with oral argument because the facts and legal contentions are adequately presented in the materials before the court and argument would not aid the decisional process.

Plaintiff,

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Defendant.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiff, the Estate of Wendell Hester ("estate"), brings this tax refund suit against the United States pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7422, seeking to recover approximately $2.8 million in federal estate taxes and interest. The court has subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a). The estate filed a claim for refund in January 2003 maintaining that it erroneously overvalued the "gross estate" on its January 2000 tax return by including millions of dollars in assets Wendell Hester improperly transferred to himself from a trust fund established by his wife. The estate insisted that it should not have included the misappropriated assets in valuing his gross estate because the estate had no legal or equitable right to them. The estate sought to exclude the value of the assets from the gross estate or alternatively to claim them as a deduction—despite the facts that the misappropriated, commingled assets remained in his estate; no beneficiary had asserted or was expected to assert a claim; and the statute of limitations had already run on potential claims. Believing that the estate has been properly taxed, the United States moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Because the court has considered matters outside the pleadings, including the estate's admissions during oral argument and its submissions to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), the court treats the motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment,¹ and concludes that the estate has failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact for trial. Essentially, the estate seeks either to exclude

1. Rule 12(b)(6) provides that a motion to dismiss may be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56 if matters outside the pleadings are considered by the court and all parties are given a reasonable opportunity to present material relevant to such a motion. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). See Gay v. Wall, 761 F.2d 175, 177 (4th Cir.1985) ("When a party is aware that material outside the pleadings is before the court, the party is on notice that a Rule 12(b)(6) motion may be treated as a motion for summary judgment.).

Appendix B

several million dollars in commingled assets over which Wendell personally exercised dominion and control or alternatively to deduct those amounts for a hypothetical third-party claim that the trust beneficiaries never asserted and that the estate never paid or expected to pay. However, the court finds that the IRS properly determined that the commingled assets were properly included in Wendell's gross estate and that his estate is not entitled to a deduction for a hypothetical, unasserted, and unpaid claim that it never expects to be made or paid. Accordingly, the court finds that the estate is not entitled to a refund.

I.

Wendell and Dorothy Hester lived as husband and wife until Dorothy's death on November 11, 1993. Dorothy had established the Dorothy Hester Trust U/W ("the trust"), which contained substantial assets and provided that Wendell would receive a qualifying income interest for life upon Dorothy's death. Wendell was serving as the trustee when, on February 25, 1998, he breached his fiduciary duties by transferring all of its assets (the "trust assets") to himself.² On that date, Wendell transferred all of the trust's cash into his individual brokerage account at Schwab ("Schwab Account") which already contained his own cash and securities worth over $4 million. Wendell then engaged in several months of "day trading" of stocks and other

2. The trust included approximately $3.2 million in cash and a promissory note ("note") in the face amount of $1.25 million.

securities, which generated over $2 million in net losses, used commingled assets to borrow on the margin, withdrew over $450,000 in cash, and collected approximately $280,000 of principal and interest from a promissory note held by the estate. In the estate's own words: "At some indeterminable point after the trust terminations and before Hester's death, the commingling became so complex that it was impossible for anyone to determine which interests in the combined whole belonged to Hester and which interests in the combined whole belonged to his children." See Attachment to Form 843-Claim for Refund and Request for Abatement, Estate Tax Refund Claim Legal Analysis, at 4. All the while, the trust beneficiaries received nothing. Wendell died a resident of the Commonwealth of Virginia on October 12, 1998, leaving all of his assets to the Wendell Hester Trust.

Pursuant to Virginia Code § 64.1-179, the executor of Wendell's estate instituted the "Debt and Demands" procedure requiring "those who may have claims against the estate to show cause against the payment and delivery of the estate assets to The Wendell Hester Trust as legatee." Newspaper notice was published, as required by law. After no one appeared in opposition to the plan of distribution, "an Order of Distribution was entered in the Circuit Court of Frederick County, Virginia on September 20, 1999." See Supplement to Statement of Facts to Form 843-Claim for Refund and Request for Abatement, at 1.

Appendix B

On January 7, 2000, the executor of Wendell's estate filed a federal estate tax return with the IRS. The return included the value of all assets on hand—including any remaining misappropriated assets—in the value of the gross estate, sought no deduction for the hypothetical claims of the trust's beneficiaries, and showed tax liability of over $2.5 million, which the estate then paid. On August 27, 2002, the executor paid nearly $227,000 in additional estate taxes that were assessed after an audit and approximately $62,000 in interest. In 2003 and 2004, the estate filed claims for refunds. Reversing course from its initial return, the estate sought to exclude the value of assets appropriated from Dorothy's trust or alternatively to deduct those amounts, ultimately claiming a refund of more than $2.8 million in estate taxes and interest. On April 13, 2006, the IRS notified the estate that it was disallowing the claims, and the estate brought this refund suit.

To justify the claimed refund, the estate advances a number of claims which essentially collapse into two alternative theories. First, the estate contends that it erroneously included the misappropriated trust assets in the gross estate and, therefore, inflated the taxable estate. Under this theory, the estate claims that the misappropriated assets should be excluded from the gross estate calculation because Wendell possessed no interest in the assets after his breach of fiduciary duty but merely held the assets in a constructive trust for the trust beneficiaries. Second, the estate claims that if the property is properly included in the gross estate, the estate should be awarded an offsetting deduction of equal value, for "claims against the estate," pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 2053(a)(3), or for "indebtedness" in respect of property that is included in "the value of the gross estate," pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 2053(a)(4).³

3. The estate divides these two theories into seven different claims, with Counts I-IV supporting the "exclusion theory" and Counts V and VI supporting the "deduction theory." Count VII summarily concludes that regardless of which theory the court accepts, the United States should refund estate taxes and interest paid by the estate, with interest.

Under the exclusion theory, the estate argues in Counts I and III that assets related to Wendell's breach of fiduciary duty—specifically, in Count I, the Schwab Account and note, and in Count III, certain assets traceable to the Schwab Account and note ("traceable assets")—should not be included in the gross estate because Wendell possessed no legal or equitable interest in these assets. In Counts II and IV, the estate alternatively claims that the same assets—the Schwab Account and note in Count II, and the traceable assets in Count IV—were properly included in the gross estate but erroneously overvalued. The estate argues that if these assets are included in the gross estate, they should be valued at $0 because the beneficiaries of the trust are the proper owners.

In support of the deduction theory, the estate claims in Count V that the misappropriated assets may be deducted from the gross estate under § 2053(a)(4) as "indebtedness." In Count VI, the estate alternately suggests that the misappropriated assets qualify as deductible "claims against the estate," pursuant to § 2053(a)(3).

Finally, in Count VIII, the estate also objects to a recent gift tax deficiency asserted by the United State against it and claims a separate estate tax deduction "[t]o the extent that all or any portion of the . . . gift tax deficiency . . . is correct."

Appendix B

The estate does not allege that any of the trust beneficiaries have ever asserted a claim against it or Wendell, or that it has ever expected such a claim. Nevertheless, the estate argues that Wendell's gross estate and any deductions must be determined and valued as of the date of his death, irrespective of later events. In contrast, the United States contends that all commingled assets were properly included in Wendell's gross estate and that his estate may not deduct hypothetical, unasserted claims that it does not expect to pay-claims, which in any event, are barred by the statute of limitations.

II.

The estate claims that the misappropriated trust assets should not be included in the gross estate calculation, arguing that Wendell had no interest in these assets—even though he clearly treated them as his own—because the trust beneficiaries equitably owned the assets after Wendell breached his fiduciary duty. However, “[t]axation is not so much concerned with the refinements of title as it is with the actual command over the property taxed.” Burnet v. Wells, 289 U.S. 670, 678, 53 S.Ct. 761, 77 L.Ed. 1439 (1933). As courts have recognized, a taxpayer who misappropriates funds has received income:

When a taxpayer acquires earnings, lawfully or unlawfully, without the consensual recognition, express or implied, of an obligation to repay and without restriction as to their disposition, "he has received income which he is required to return, even though it may still be claimed that he is not entitled to retain the money, and even though he may still be adjudged liable to restore its equivalent."

James v. United States, 366 U.S. 213, 219, 81 S.Ct. 1052, 6 L.Ed.2d 246 (1961) (quoting N. Am. Oil Consol. v. Burnet, 286 U.S. 417, 424, 52 S.Ct. 613, 76 L.Ed. 1197 (1932)).

Here, Wendell exercised dominion and control over the assets as though they were his own without an express or implied recognition of an obligation to repay and without restriction as to their disposition, commingling the misappropriated assets with his own to the extent that "it was impossible for anyone to determine which interest in the combined whole belonged to [Wendell] and which interest in the combined whole belonged to his children." Consequently, because the "gross estate" includes, at fair market value, "all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated" in which the decedent has an "interest" at the time of his death, 26 U.S.C. §§ 2031(a), 2033, 26 C.F.R. § 20.2031-1(b), and Wendell controlled the misappropriated assets and did not reimburse them before his death, they were properly included in the valuation of his gross estate at fair market value.⁴

4. The estate claims in Counts II and IV that the misappropriated assets should be included in the gross estate but valued at $0. See supra note 3. However, the estate freely

*Appendix BIII.

The estate alternatively contends that if the misappropriated assets are included in the valuation of the gross estate, the estate should be allowed an offsetting deduction of equal value pursuant to § 2053(a)(3) for "claims against the estate," or pursuant to § 2053(a)(4) for "indebtedness" in respect of property that is included in "the value of the gross estate."⁵ admits that the assets' fair market value is substantially more than $0. Essentially, the estate is merely reiterating its theory that the trust assets should be excluded from the gross estate calculation. However, for the reasons already given, these assets are properly included in the valuation of the gross estate at their fair market value.

5. Section 2053(a) provides:

For purposes of the tax imposed by section 2001, the value of the taxable estate shall be determined by deducting from the value of the gross estate such amounts—

- (1) for funeral expenses,
- (2) for administration expenses,
- (3) for claims against the estate, and
- (4) for unpaid mortgages on, or any indebtedness in respect of, property where the value of the decedent's interest therein, undiminished by such mortgage or indebtedness, is included in the value of the gross estate, as are allowable by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered.

Appendix B

The facts do not support a deduction under either section. First, nothing remotely suggests that the trust's beneficiaries ever made a claim against Wendell or his estate or that Wendell or his estate ever expected such a claim to be made or paid, a requirement of § 2053(a)(3). Second, Wendell's personal acquisition of funds in violation of his fiduciary duty did not create an indebtedness under § 2053(a)(4).

Federal courts must assume that Congress intends for words to be given their "well-known meaning[s]" in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary." Deputy v. du Pont, 308 U.S. 488, 498, 60 S.Ct. 363, 84 L.Ed. 416 (1940). A "claim" is a demand. See In re Baltimore Pearl Hominy Co., 5 F.2d 553, 555 (4th Cir.1925) (equating the terms). "The word 'claim' when used as a noun, has been defined as the 'assertion of an existing right: any right to payment.'" Metric/Kvaerner Fayetteville v. Fed. Ins. Co., 403 F.3d 188, 199 (4th Cir.2005) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 264 (8th ed.2004)). However, in the present case the estate does not contend that the trust beneficiaries ever asserted any right against Wendell or his estate or that the estate ever anticipated a claim to be made.⁶ To accept the estate's arguments here, where there is no actual or expected claimant, for all intents and purposes, would be to replace the statutory language, "claims against the estate" with "theoretical liabilities of the estate."⁷ Accordingly, the court concludes that the estate is not entitled to a deduction under § 2053(a)(3) because there has never been an actual or expected claim against Wendell or the estate.

6. Indeed, in a "Supplement to Statement of Facts" submitted in connection with the estate's Form 843 refund claim filed in January 2003, the estate represented that the beneficiaries of the trust "had not indicated that they would assert their constructive trust rights against assets titled in the name of Wendell Hester, Wendell Hester's estate or Wendell Hester's trust, nor have they or any one of them since indicated that they would assert such constructive trust rights." Furthermore, at oral argument, the estate admitted that it had no basis for anticipating that any claims would be filed or that a tolling provision applied to extend the statute of limitations.

Even though the fact that there is no actual or expected claimant is sufficient to disallow the deduction, the United States also argues that the estate should be denied a deduction because, even if there were an actual or expected claimant, the claimant would not have a cognizable claim, since any third-party claim arising from Wendell's misappropriation of the trust assets is now barred by Virginia's two-year statute of limitations that applies to breaches of fiduciary duty. The estate has not contended that the statute of limitations has not run on its theoretical liabilities.⁸ Instead, relying on Ithaca

7. Such a construction would also be at odds with Treasury Regulations that elaborate on the § 2053(a)(3) allowance of deductions for "claims against the estate." These regulations provide that the amounts that may be deducted are those that "represent personal obligations of the decedent existing at the time of his death, whether or not then matured," 26 C.F.R. § 20.2053-4, and note that a deduction will be allowed even "though its exact amount is not then known, provided it is ascertainable with reasonable certainty, and will be paid." 26 C.F.R. § 20.2053-1(b)(3) (emphasis added).

8. Even though the United States argues the two-year statute of limitations applicable to breaches of fiduciary duty

Appendix B

Trust Co. v. United States, 279 U.S. 151, 49 S.Ct. 291, 73 L.Ed. 647 (1929), it argues that the running of the statute of limitations is immaterial because deductions for claims against the estate are valued on the date of death, and the statute of limitations had not run on the date of Wendell's death. The court agrees with the United States, that even if there had been a claimant the running of the statute limitations on that claim is an event the IRS can take into account in determining the deductibility of the claimant's claim.

In Ithaca Trust Co., the Court ruled that post-death events must not be considered in valuing the amount of estate tax deductions, since "[t]he estate so far as may be is settled as of the testator's death." Id. at 155. Ithaca controls, see Va.Code Ann. § 8.01-248, and the estate has not argued that it does not, the court concludes that the five-year statute of limitations for conversion is applicable. See Va.Code Ann. § 8.01-243(B) ("Every action for injury to property ... shall be brought within five years after the cause of action accrues."); Bader v. Central Fidelity Bank, 245 Va. 286, 427 S.E.2d 184, 186-87 (Va.1993) (applying the five-year statute of limitations to a conversion claim). The five-year statute ran in February 2003. The statute of limitations for any equitable remedies also ran on this date. See Belcher v. Kirkwood, 193 Ga.App. 695, 388 S.E.2d 729, 731 (Va.1989) ("It is a well-established principle uniformly acted upon by courts of equity, that in respect to the statute of limitations equity follows the law; and if a legal demand be asserted in equity which at law is barred by statute, it is equally barred in equity.") (citations omitted). The fact that the statute ran later than the United States argues does not appear material to the United States' argument.

Trust involved valuation of a life estate and corresponding charitable deduction. The decedent had bequeathed property to charity but had reserved a life estate in his spouse. Id. at 154. Even though the widow died only six months after her husband, the court ruled that the widow's life tenancy value should be based on an actuarial computation rather than on the actual, known date of her early death. Id. at 155.

This court recognizes that the decisions following Ithaca Trust are often hard to reconcile. See, e.g., Estate of Smith v. Comm'r, 198 F.3d 515, 522 n. 16 (5th Cir.1999) ("[A]ll of the cases in this field dealing with post-death evidence are not easily reconciled with one another, and at times it is like picking one's way through a minefield in seeking to find a completely consistent course of decision.") (citations omitted). Some courts strictly apply Ithaca Trust's directive to value deductions on the date of one's death, based on the "more or less certain prophecies of the future," Ithaca Trust, 279 U.S. at 155,⁹

9. See, e.g., O'Neal v. United States, 258 F.3d 1265, 1272 (11th Cir.2001) ("We prefer to follow the analysis used by the Supreme Court in Ithaca Trust"); Estate of McMorris v. Comm'r, 243 F.3d 1254, 1261-62 (10th Cir.2001) (reasoning that excluding consideration of post-death events in the valuation of the estate "provides a bright line rule which alleviates the uncertainty and delay in estate administration which may result if events occurring months or even years after a decedent's death could be considered in valuing a claim against the estate"), Estate of Smith v. Comm'r, 198 F.3d 515 (5th Cir.1999) (reversing a tax court decision that limited a deduction to the while other courts consider post-death events in their estate valuations, reasoning that "[t]he claims which Congress intended to be deducted were actual claims, not theoretical ones." Jacobs v. Comm'r, 34 F.2d 233, 235 (8th Cir.1929).¹⁰

Despite the divergence of opinion in this area, courts often consider post-death events in determining amount actually paid to settle a claim), Estate of Van Horne v. Comm'r, 720 F.2d 1114 (9th Cir.1983) (allowing deduction for $596,387 actuarial value of spousal support obligation for ex-husband's lifetime, even though he died after receiving only $35,000), Popstra v. United States, 680 F.2d 1248 (9th Cir.1982) (holding valid the date-of-death valuation of a deduction for lien claims, even though the amount actually paid by the estate in settlement of the claims was less than the amount of the deduction).

10. See also Estate of Sachs v. Comm'r, 856 F.2d 1158, 1162 (8th Cir.1988) ("The date-of-death valuation principle adopted in Ithaca Trust [for charitable bequests] is not universally applicable to other tax contexts."), Comm'r v. Estate of Shively, 276 F.2d 372, 375 (2d Cir.1960) (holding that decedent's estate could not deduct full date-of-death value of spousal support obligations because ex-wife re-married before estate filed return, noting that, "To permit an estate such a deduction under these circumstances would be to prefer fiction to reality and would defeat the clear purpose of [the precursor to § 2053(a)(3)]"), Comm'r v. State Street Trust Co., 128 F.2d 618 (1st Cir.1942), Estate of Kyle v. Comm'r, 94 T.C. 829, 1990 WL 77198 (1990) (disallowing the estate's deduction for the value of a date-of-death litigation claim because the case was resolved in estate's favor six years after decedent's death).

Appendix B

deductibility of theoretical liabilities. For example, in Estate of Hagmann v. Commissioner, 60 T.C. 465, 1973 WL 2507 (1975), aff'd per curium, 492 F.2d 796 (5th Cir.1974), the tax court considered post-death events and disallowed a deduction for claims against the estate that became unenforceable after death. There, the Hagmann estate deducted certain debts owed by the decedent; however, the creditor ultimately failed to file a claim within the time required under Florida probate law. Id. at 468-69. Accordingly, since no claim was timely filed, the court determined that the potential obligation never became enforceable and that the debts were not deductible. Id. at 469. As other courts have noted, Estate of Hagmann essentially rejects any "deduction for a potential claim without an existing claimant — or, . . . an identifiable claimant without a cognizable claim." See, e.g., Estate of Smith v. Comm'r, 198 F.3d 515, 525 (5th Cir.1999). Even some courts that have adopted a strict interpretation of Ithaca Trust's date-of-death valuation have adopted the Estate of Hagmann distinction and consider post-death events when a case involves hypothetical liabilities. See, e.g., Estate of O'Neal v. United States, 258 F.3d 1265, 1272 n. 24 (11th Cir.2001) ("We agree with [the Estate of Hagmann,] distinction."); Estate of Smith v. Comm'r, 198 F.3d at 525 n. 41 (noting the same).¹¹

11. The Department of the Treasury has also adopted this view. See Rev. Rul. 60-247, 1960-2 C.B. 272, 273 ("[I]t is the position of the Internal Revenue Service that no deduction will be allowed for claims against the estate which have not been paid or will not be paid because the creditor waives payment, fails to file his claim within the time limit . . . or otherwise fails to enforce payment.").

Appendix B

Allowing a deduction here, where a taxpayer is attempting to secure a refund for a theoretical liability that will never be paid and that is now barred by the statute of limitations, would essentially "exalt form over substance." Estate of Hagmann, 60 T.C. at 468. Therefore, because the estate has neither an actual or expected claimant, or a cognizable claim, the misappropriated assets are not deductible under § 2053(a)(3).

IV.

The estate is also barred from taking a deduction under § 2053(a)(4) for "indebtedness" in respect of property that is included in the gross estate. Just as the court cannot construe the word "claim" in § 2053(a)(3) to be synonymous with "theoretical liability," it cannot construe "indebtedness" in § 2053(a)(4) to be synonymous either. The estate is not indebted to the trust's beneficiaries. Generally speaking, "a debt is defined for federal tax purposes as an unconditional and legally enforceable obligation for the payment of money." See Comm'r v. McKay Prods., Corp., 178 F.2d 639, 644 (3d Cir.1949) (internal citations omitted). The estate was theoretically or hypothetically liable, but it was not "indebted" because neither Wendell nor the estate had an unconditional and legally enforceable obligation for the payment of money. Therefore, Wendell's personal acquisition of funds in violation of his fiduciary duty did not create an indebtedness under § 2053(a)(4), and the IRS properly disallowed his claim for a refund based on a deduction under that section. Moreover, a deduction under § 2053(a)(4) stands on the same untenable footing as a deduction under § 2053(a)(3), essentially for the same reasons that a deduction under that section is untenable. See, e.g., Estate of Theis v. Comm'r, 81 T.C. 741, 748-49, 1983 WL 14889 (1983), aff'd, 770 F.2d 981, 984 (11th Cir.1985) (explaining that Congress enacted § 2053(a)(4) simply as a clarification of existing law under § 2053(a)(3) and meant for the sections to be applied consistently). Without a claimant pursuing it, it is purely hypothetical and theoretical, and even if a claimant pursued it, the statute of limitations would bar it.

IV.

For reasons stated, the court grants summary judgment for the United States.¹² An appropriate order will be entered this day.

12. The court grants summary judgment as to all claims, including Count VII, except for Count VIII, which it dismisses as moot.

Count VII is merely cumulative of Counts I-VI, as the estate simply restates its overarching conclusion that the United States should refund estate taxes and interest to it. Because the court found that the estate presented no genuine issue as to any material fact in Counts I-VI, the court also finds no genuine issue as to any material fact in Count VII.

Finally, in Count VIII, the estate argues that it may be entitled to a deduction for a gift tax deficiency that the United States asserted on April 13, 2006, depending on whether the assessment is correct. The United States has conceded that the assessment is defensive in nature so that it will not pursue the deficiency if the estate's other claims are denied. Therefore, the court dismisses Count VIII as moot.
